President's Message

WOW! That's all that can be said about the weather last week during our annual King Mackerel Tournament out of Harker's Island. Our arrival teased us with gorgeous sunny 80 degree weather, light wind and calm seas. As they say, "What a difference a day makes". Monday started out with beautiful blue Carolina skies, but 20-30 mile per hour winds left the fleet stuck in the harbor.

It was all down hill from there until Friday when the seas calmed and fishing was tolerable. It was by far the worse weather we have had in many years during this tournament and it allowed our members only three fishable days. Many of us had the opportunity to catch up on our sleep on the really miserable days that we couldn't fish.

I will say this, we have some hard core fishermen in our chapter and I commend all of you on your boating skills (even though a couple landed on shoals).

Although the weather was less than miserable, it seems that a good time was had by most. The two catered pig pickin's were packed with great food which left everyone with a full belly and weary eyes. The chapter raffled off well over $1500 in prizes and many lucky winners walked away with some really nice gear or cash. Thursday night saw most all of us get together around the grill, cook up some chicken and fries and spend time sharing stories. It was a great evening of camaraderie amongst chapter members to say the least.

Congratulations to all the winners. I'd also like to say a special thanks to Rob Pellicot for all his efforts to make this tournament so much fun and a huge success. Sure wish he had some influence on the weather though. I'd also like to say thanks to everyone else who offered their time to setup, cleanup, unload/load the trailer and pitching in whenever needed. Even though the weather didn't co-operate, I believe a good time was had by all and I can't wait until next year. Thanks Everyone!

Remember our meeting is this Wednesday the 16th. We will be having the tournament awards presentation, along with sharing a few stories of our adventures. We have some great upcoming meetings and hope to see you all there.

Fishing Reports

Chincoteague Action

By Charlie Koski

Fishing action on flounder slowed even more as the summer season waned for tourism but other fish have invaded the waters again such as Sea Mullet (aka Kingfish) and Red Drum in the 18 - 26 inch range (keeper size). The Kingfish have been caught anywhere leading to the inlet from buoys 11 out, off the point of Assateague even some in the back bays. Using pink fish bites on #6 Pacific Bass long shank hooks in any flavor does the trick on these tasty little morsels. Some old timers on Chincoteague would rather eat a half dozen of these fillets vs one small fillet of flounder. My customers are averaging about 30 - 40 keepers per trip at 10" and up and should last through October if the weather holds. A few flounder are being caught but very few and you got to put the time in to get one in the box.

Puppy drum have been in the back creeks for about three weeks but with this NE blow moving in it could force them farther south. I never really fished for these guys until this year and what a blast they are to hook. Sort of like a small croaker on steroids. Course we have seen croaker up to 23" in the past here as one of my customers (a 12 yr old first time fishing saltwater Washingtonian) landed a citation croaker at 3.8 lbs and 23" a few years back on a two hour trip! But now back to the Spot Tails, you can catch them on the high tide at ebb and outgoing by casting any color 1/4 - 3/8 oz jighead tipped 4"-6" gulp swimming mullet, Bass Assassin paddle tails or any Z-Man rubber baits. Start in 4' or less water by sending it to the tall grass and letting it hit the bottom and then just give it a few twitches and you will feel a tap tap, hold on cause they are fighters. If you haven't tried the Z-Man rubbers you got to cause they are like the old cartoon man Mr Rubber. They are hard for any other fish to bite off cause they stretch to about your arm length without breaking, maybe further but I hate to waste any bait, rubber or real. You can also bottom fish for them with slider rigs using cut bait or peeler crabs on the low tides in the creeks or right at the tip of Wallops Island right outside the breakers. This requires using the anchor and being vewy vewy quiet. Redfish spook real easily!

The inshore wrecks are still holding trigger fish and tog just opened Sept 20th but the water needs to cool down before they get feisty. The rail cars aka Blackfish Banks may still hold some flounder but their migration to the continental shelf has begun and as the water cools more the fish are off to their spawning grounds.

Va bay striper opened Oct 4 and there are plenty of schoolies around off Onancock and south just look for the birds. The big ones will wait till around the end of November through December 31st around the Kiptopeake and CBBT area. They should show in the suds soon as the puppy drum bite dwindles. But with the government shut down Assateague is closed to everyone.

Offshore action has heated up somewhat with bigeye, white marlin and a few yellowfin still being boated. Soon the big Bluefin moving south from up north will begin. Deep dropping has been getting popular for Golden and Blueline tiles and grouper but you need a real nice day and a lot of arm strength (or electric reels) to bring these from the deep they are caught in (600' - 1000') at the edges of the canyons. Sea bass has heated up and limits are being caught but again you need the weather and may take all day to get your limit of 20 at 12.5" fish after weeding through the smaller ones. Sea Bass season closes from Oct 15 through 31st. Fishing season does not end in the south but the crowds are a lot smaller and less pressure so keep that boat fueled and wait till it get below 40 degrees before you winterize it!

Tight lines.....

Ocean City Action

By Sue Foster

Water Temp: 69.4

Flounder are moving out of the bay and anglers caught a few nice ones this weekend. We continue to hear about puppy drum from the surf and from areas in the bay where there is structure. Anglers flipping sand fleas under the pilings of the Rt. 50 Bridge and around the South Jetty are catching puppy drum, tautog, sheepshead, and some triggerfish.

Anglers casting lead heads with gulp are catching stripers and puppy drum. At night, we're seeing action from the Route 50 Bridge on blues, stripers, and some trout. Oceanic Pier had nice flounder this weekend along with lots of blues and shad at night.

There's still eating size spot around. Lots of snapper blues were in the surf this weekend biting on finger mullet. There were some nice kingfish and a few puppy drum as well. Sea bass picked up offshore.

Chesapeake Bay Action

October 9, 2013

Early fall tends to be a wonderful time to fish surface lures such as poppers in the tidal rivers and bay but jigging over structure, casting metal to breaking fish, chumming, live lining Spot and of course trolling are all productive methods to fish this week.

Small Bluefish are still part of the mix in the upper bay and most of them are in the 15" size range and they along with the small Striped Bass are making life miserable for Bay Anchovies that are exiting the tidal rivers and moving down the bay along the edges of the shipping channel. White Perch are schooling up in some of the deeper waters of the bay and jigging heavy metal with a dropper fly tends to be standard fair. The Bay Bridge piers continue to get a lot of attention from fishermen as long as they keep producing Striped Bass. Most fishermen are either live lining Spot or jigging, often with good results. Those fishermen jigging near the rock piles report those 15" Striped Bass are all over any jig that comes their way.

Middle bay region fishermen have a bountiful mix of Striped Bass and Bluefish spread throughout the region. There are still folks live lining Spot at favorite places such as the Hill but most any good channel edges or structure should be holding some fish. Bluefish tend to be pesky competitors for any live Spot sent down to a 30' channel edge. Trolling has been a good option and spoons behind planers or inline weights are the tools of the trade. Keep those Storm Shads and bucktails safely stored in tackle boxes until the Bluefish leave us.

The shallow water fishery in the middle bay is providing some fun and exciting topwater action for fishermen who can catch a high tide during the morning or evening hours. Topwater lures such as poppers are the best way to go for this type of fishing since crankbaits and swim shads tend to get fouled in grass and topwater strikes are a lot more fun. Red Drum, Bluefish and Speckled Trout are in the mix and a welcomed addition.

White Perch are holding deep in the lower sections of the tidal rivers over oyster bottom or near structure. Jigging with a jig and dropper fly is the most common way of fishing for them but a bottom rig baited with peeler crab or bloodworm will also do the trick. When fishing with bait there is also the chance of picking up some of the last croakers or large Spot that are on their way south.

The lower Bay region continues to perhaps hold the widest variety of fish this week. The shallows are holding Striped Bass, Speckled Trout and Red Drum and fishermen are enjoying excellent fishing from boats casting lures or by fishing from shore with bait. The eastern shore marshes and the shore lines near the mouth of the Patuxent River have been very good places to fish lately.

Out in the bay a mix of Bluefish, Striped Bass and the occasional Red Drum are being caught by trolling spoons behind planers and inline weights at traditional locations such as St. Georges Island on the lower Potomac, Buoy 72 and 72A along the eastern edge of the shipping channel and the Middle Grounds up past the Target Ship. Breaking fish are popping up all over the lower bay region and casting to the surface fish or jiggling underneath can provide good action. There are small Striped Bass on top but sometime larger ones are underneath. Chumming at the mouth of the Potomac and Buoys 72 and 72A as well as the Middle Grounds is producing some hot and heavy Bluefish action with some going 5lbs or better.

Fishermen are still catching large Spot, White Perch and some croakers in the lower section of the Patuxent River, the mouth of the Honga River and near Tangier and Pocomoke Sounds. Small Bluefish and a mix of Red Drum and Speckled Trout can add to the mix for those fishing peeler crab baits.

Virginia Beach Action

By Dr. Julie Ball
October 4, 2013

Cooler weather is settling in, and the cooler water saltwater fish are taking up residence in local waters. With both inshore and offshore venues productive right now, barring any inclement weather, the fall fishing trend should continue right on track. But the remnants of the pending tropical storm could change things up a bit.

The Bay striped bass season opened this week. Plenty of anglers will be out in force competing for school-sized fish in all the usual haunts. Rockfish in the 18-24-inch range are stacked along light-lines, drop-offs, and the bridge pilings of the lower Bay crossings and inlets. As of October 4th you can keep two fish per person measuring between 18 and 28-inches, with one of the two fish allowed to measure above 28-inches in Bay waters.

Bull red drum continue their well-received run near the 3rd and 4th islands of the CBBT, and off Sandbridge and the Wildlife Refuge. But until the Refuge reopens, anglers are lining up where they can to get in on the drum action. Big reds are also still providing action along the breakers off the Eastern Shore barrier islands. A few straggling cobia are still a possibility, but this trend is basically over for the year.

Backwater fishing action is heating up nicely. Puppy drum are still overwhelming in local shallows and inlets, with the best action happening on fresh cut bait or live mullet. Good numbers of speckled trout are hitting lures and live bait in the Eastern Shore shallows, Lynnhaven, Rudee, and Little Creek Inlets, the Poquoson flats area, as well as in the Elizabeth River. This tendency will continue to intensify through the cooler months.

The spot action is good this week, keeping local surf and pier anglers busy. Little Creek Inlet, the HRBT, and Rudee Inlet have been the most productive areas lately, with bloodworms the top bait. Big croaker are still responsive in the deeper holes near the HRBT, the CBBT, and within local inlets.

Flounder continue to stack up along the lower Bay channels and shoal edges. The 3rd island produced keeper flatfish for anglers this week, while the Baltimore and Thimble Shoal Channels, and the Hampton Bar are also good places to try. Offshore and inshore wrecks are also giving up some nice catches of flounder, along with some jumbo seabass and triggerfish. Bottom bouncers can also find willing tautog on some of these same structures.

Within Bay waters, folks are experiencing a boost in tautog action along the CBBT and inshore structures. Limits of tog ranging to around 4-pounds are taking offerings of fiddler crabs along the CBBT. Big triggerfish are also hitting these baits, along with smallish sheepshead from the tubes of the CBBT and the pilings of the Lesner Bridge in Lynnhaven.

Although the action has been off this week, October can be a good month for smoker-sized king mackerel for those trolling from Sandbridge to False Cape. Spanish mackerel and false albacore are also available in these same areas. Some big amberjack are still circling the South Tower, while jack crevelle are also a possibility at the Chesapeake Light Tower.

Deep dropping will pick up when more interest stirs, but the offshore bite is still a distraction. The Virginia Beach Fishing Center reports that a good selection of barrelfish along with nice blueline tilefish, golden tilefish, and a variety of grouper are hitting along the edges of the Norfolk Canyon recently.

Although the marlin bite has cooled since last weekend's Nor'easter, billfish are still providing some opportunities for bluewater boats. The rain and blow from "Karen" will likely finish the job by the beginning of next week. But the prospect of a variety of tuna is overpowering lingering marlin chances. A good run of longfin tuna is attracting the fleet to the Canyon, where boats are intercepting dozens of nice 30-pound class fish. Several boats are also still encountering huge bigeye tuna, scattered blackfin and nice yellowfin tuna, and good numbers of gaffer and bailer-sized mahi. Wahoo are also a good possibility, along with swordfish.

Delaware Action

By Eric Burnley Sr.*

Updated: October 11, 2013

DELAWARE BAY This fishing report will be based on what happened before the nor'easter. After the storm passes all bets are off as to what conditions and fishing will be.

The beautiful weather made for excellent fishing conditions and many people took advantage of the situation. In the upper bay several keeper rockfish were caught near Ship John on bunker chunks. The Yellow Can off of Collins Beach, 4L, 6L and Miah Maull Shoal also saw a few rock on the same bait. Flounder were taken at Miah Maull on minnows, squid and bunker.

Tog were the primary target further down the bay with reports of fish caught out of Bowers Beach, Mispillion River and Lewes. The Outer Wall was particularly good for tog with big triggerfish caught on the Inner Wall. A few nice sheepshead were caught along with the tog.

The Outer Wall also produced keeper rockfish. The best action was at dawn and dusk on plugs, bucktails and eels.

Big spot remained in the rivers and from the Cape Henlopen Fishing Pier. Croaker were more difficult to find, but those that were caught were larger than what we caught during the summer. Bloodworms will work for spot and croaker.

Blues continue to show up chasing bait on the surface. The south end of the Outer Wall is a good location on an outgoing current with small metal lures the top bait. White perch are in the tidal creeks from New Castle to Sussex counties. Bloodworms are the prime perch bait.

INDIAN RIVER INLET I am surprised we haven't had much action from here during the mullet run. Keeper rockfish and flounder have been caught on live mullet, but not in the numbers I had hoped. Rockfish also fell for plugs that resembled a mullet and the always effective white bucktail and white worm.

The opening week of tog season saw some keepers taken on green crab. Triggerfish and sheepshead are also in the mix.

Massey's Landing continued to produce flounder, rock, blues, croaker and drum. Try using surface plugs around the shoreline early or late in the day for rock and blues.

INSHORE OCEAN I was able to get out last Friday and fish near A Buoy. There were five of us on a charter boat out of Indian River and we landed sea bass, trout, croaker, blues, one flounder, one triggerfish and two very large smooth dog sharks. The largest shark measured 47 inches and became the main ingredient in my wife's sweet and sour shark recipe. From reports it seemed most of the other boats in the area had equal success.

Wahoo were caught on the inshore lumps along with false albacore and bonito. Bottom fishing on deep water wrecks produced large sea bass and ling.

OFFSHORE OCEAN As of Sunday, true albacore and yellowfin tuna were still snapping in the canyons. The Poorman's was the place to be over the weekend. Marlin were scarce and will probably be gone once the sea settles down.

SURF FISHING Small blues made up most of the catch from the beach. Fresh mullet was the prime bait. A few red drum and kings were caught on the same bait along with even fewer short rockfish.

Tips and Tackle New to Saltwater Fishing?

Are you new to saltwater fishing? Just getting started with your coastal angling adventures? Check out these basic saltwater fishing tips for beginners.

1. Practice makes perfect. As a first step towards perfecting your saltwater fishing skills, consider going on a trip where you can practice alongside more experienced anglers. Fishing party/head boats can also be ideal for this, with dedicated staff that will be delighted to help you through each step of the process, from baiting to reeling. Public fishing piers can also be a good place to pick up basic skills.

2. Become familiar with the equipment. This may seem like the most obvious tip, but it's important to take the time to become familiar with the processes of casting, knot tying, and baiting. These are things you can practice without even setting foot on a boat, and once you start to get the hang of these essential steps, your next saltwater fishing venture will be that much more pleasurable.

3. Sun, moon, wind and weather tips. Picking the proper location and time of day for saltwater fishing can make all the difference in the world. Acquaint yourself with how the phases of the moon and sun affect where fish can be found, and which times of day are ideal for different types of fish. Wind and weather conditions can also have a huge effect on fish migration patterns as well.

4. Follow the tides. It's equally important to find out what the tides will be on the day you plan to fish. Fishing on the ebb tide normally presents the best conditions for saltwater fishing, although in general the best tides range from half rising to half falling.

5. Research the area. If you're new to saltwater fishing, you're most likely also going to be new to the waterways in your area. Before you venture out on the waters, take the time to look over navigation charts and study the most promising areas to fish. Educate yourself about the different species of fish available and which types of tackle are best to use. Check with the locals for additional saltwater fishing tips particular to the area.

6. Fish on the perimeter The edges of the perimeter are the best place to start saltwater fishing, so that the minimum number of fish will be scared away in the event that a fish is hooked.

7. Learn how to spot fish. Beachfront locations with holes, pockets and reefs are often the best places to go for saltwater fishing. Channels that lead to deeper water are also a good place to look. Keep your eyes open for feeding fish in hot spots. Circling gulls and birds are also an excellent indicator of where fish may be.

8. Don't give up too quickly. One of the most important saltwater fishing tips to remember is not to move too quickly from spot to spot. Consider trying at least two different lures or bait, and be sure to thoroughly probe all points that look promising.

DNR in the News

First-ever authentic Diamond Jim captured in Maryland Fishing Challenge history

Today marked an exciting day in the nine-year history of the Maryland Fishing Challenge as Blair Wheeler, 25 of Herndon, Va., became the first person to win a $25,000 cash prize. After confirming her August catch was the real deal – tagged with the randomly selected winning number – Wheeler walked off stage with a prize package that also included a pair of one-carat diamond earrings from Zachary's Jewelers of Annapolis, and $6,000 in gift cards from participating Maryland tackle shops.

"I'm in kind of a shock!" said Wheeler. "Who thinks they're going to win $25,000?"

Wheeler caught the winning striper while fishing aboard the charter, Hook Mash out of Deale, as part of a birthday celebration for her brother and husband. The fish was hooked off Tracys Landing.

"They got the trip, I got the fish," she said. "Even if we hadn't won anything we were going to go fishing again next year. Charters are great. You don't have to be a fisherman to be able to enjoy it." This was Wheeler's first time fishing in the Chesapeake Bay, and she had only been fishing 10 times total.

"With Maryland's dynamic landscapes and waterways it's no wonder fishing has long been a tradition in our State, helping friends and families create memories and enjoy the great outdoors," said DNR Secretary Joseph Gill. "Congratulations to Blair on being the first, and only, angler to catch Diamond Jim."

Nearly 2,000 people, including sponsors, anglers and their guests attended the celebration of fishing, held in conjunction with the Maryland Seafood Festival at Sandy Point State Park in Annapolis. In all, the Maryland Department of Natural Resources (DNR) presented more than $70,000 in cash, prizes and merchandise to lucky anglers at the 2013 Maryland Fishing Challenge Finale this morning.

Through the Angler Award component, those who caught a qualifying species of fish above a certain size were eligible for the grand prizes. During the past year, more than 1,000 anglers qualified to participate in grand prize drawing. Additionally, the 53 people who caught Diamond Jim imposters received $500 and a five-carat blue topaz charm, courtesy of Zachary's.

Walking away with today's grand prize of a boat, motor and trailer from Bass Pro Shops and Tracker Boats, was Roy Easter, Jr. of St. Mary's County. Easter caught an Angler Award qualifying 48.5-inch Striped Bass in the Indian Head area of the Potomac River in late April.

"I was just glad to get the T-shirt," said Easter, a Department of Defense employee. "I had a boat and I sold it, and I've missed it ever since. This will work. Now that I have a boat I'll be taking some kids fishing."

Cary Murray, of Essex, won an all-expense paid fishing trip to the Bahamas from the World Fishing Network, with his 23-inch Brown Trout from the Gunpowder River in March.

"I can't even talk," he said. "It was my first time on a stage and my first time winning something."

Debbie Walbert of Levittsville, Va.; Noah Tomasik, of Lusby; and Michael Rimmell, of Baltimore all won Bill's Outdoor Center grand prize fishing gear/tackle packages.

"I don't think my mom's car is big enough for all the gear I won," said Tomasik, a student at Calvert Middle School.
